Dr. Payne Loses Another Horse.

Saturday evening the senior Dr. Payne was on his way home from his office driving the horse recently purchased by his son, Dr. T. B. Payne. When near the corner of 16th and Franklin he met head-on the delivery rig of Kelley Brothers, which was coming down the street a pretty fast clip. The impact was terrific, and when the drivers could take stock of the damage, Dr. Payne's horse was found to be dead. A thill of the Kelly rig had penetrated the jugular vein and the horse bled to death almost instantly. This is the second horse Dr. Payne has lost within a few weeks, he having lost a horse in the Young livery barn fire.

He Was Going Up.

City Marshal Haberkorn intercepted Pat Shea Saturday night in the act of making an ascension. He had taken on ballast to the extent of twelve half pints when Mr. Haberkorn happened along and persuaded him that the night was too dark and stormy for the undertaking. Suitable storage was found for the ballast and Shea was released on bond to appear later to answer for his rashness.

James P. Moorehead, who delivered an address before the Allied Grocery Trade Press in New York City Tuesday night, and an address before the New York Lumbermen in Utica Wednesday night, returned home Saturday evening. ## "Freckles" Gave Satisfaction.

Monday night those who turned out to see "Freckles" at Wright's Grand were well repaid as the cast was a splendid one and everything pertaining to the proper presentation of the drama was strictly first class. Perhaps the dramatic effect would have been more pleasing if the leading lady, Edith Mendoza, taking the part of 'The Angel', had not been indisposed and her part taken by Jean Thomas, who also played the part of the Bird Woman. However, the play for the most part met expectations, and Manager Wright further enhanced his reputation for wise selections in giving the people of Lexington only the best.

The next attraction will be The University Glee and Mandolin Club.
